HOW WELL DO YOU KNOW THE MUSIC BIZ?

Ready to turn up the volume on your knowledge of the music biz? See if you're in tune with how the music industry makes money.

Which earns more for an artist: performing live at festivals or getting a song on a popular playlist? Hint: One reaches more people fast, but the other pays out more immediately.

What makes more money for artists: concert merchandise sales or ticket sales? Hint: Think about those $40 t-shirts at shows!

Which generates more revenue in the music industry: physical album sales or music streaming? Hint: Streaming has taken over, but some fans still love collecting.

Which artist broke the record for the highest-grossing concert tour of all time? Hint: It's a global superstar with a massive fanbase!

How much do streaming services typically pay per stream to an artist—more than 1 cent or less than 1 cent? Hint: It takes a lot of streams to make serious money!

Answers: (1) Festivals (2) Merchandise sales (3) Music streaming, but vinyl is making a comeback! (4) Taylor Swift, $1.04 billion (5) Less than 1 cent.

CONCERT MERCH: IS THAT $40 T-SHIRT WORTH IT?

Before grabbing that $40 concert tee, compare prices. At the show, you'll pay $40, but online it might be $30 with possible discounts. Think about whether it's worth paying more to have it at the show. Also, consider if it's a limited edition item you won't find later. Only you can decide if buying the shirt is a "sound" choice.

VINYL REVIVAL

Vinyl records are back; they're not just collecting dust in your grandparents' attic! Teens are getting into vinyl because of its vintage vibe and rich sound quality. Sure, you might have to learn how to use a record player (and yes, they cost more than your average Bluetooth speaker), but the experience is worth it. Plus, holding an album and flipping through giant cover art and liner notes makes vinyl feel personal. Way more fun than scrolling through a playlist.

Some of today's biggest artists are dropping special edition records, and fans enjoy collecting them to support their favorite musicians. So, whether you're into retro sounds or want your music to have a physical form, vinyl gives you a surprisingly fresh throwback experience!
